

- What do I want to learn or understand better?

I want to learn more about the principles of working in an Agile environment, Scrum and all those things. Currently my knowledge is rather limited to a few workshops I have attended working at Volvo Cars. In order to learn more about the agile framework I feel it would be quite wise to attend the lectures and try to use the resources the course provides the students, also while trying to recall the small prior knowledge that I have

- How can I help someone else, or the entire team, to learn something new?

By not keeping information and techniques to myself. If I think I know something that will benefit the team, I should share that information and not keep it to myself. Sometimes I feel like although you work as a team towards the same goal, you still are competitors within the group. This I would not like to be the case for our team going forward. So far our teamwork is working well and that is how I would like to remain. So to reach my goal we just have to keep working as we do, however that may be more difficult down the line when we start working more with the project, especially programming.

- What is my contribution towards the team's use of Scrum?

I am very unsure. Maybe that I am flexible and can imagine taking on any role in the team. Currently we have not decided roles, we feel that they will become more clear the further into the project we go. However, I do think now that I would be most comfortable as part of the "Development team". That is what I want to contribute to my team's use of Scrum. This will easiest be done by just telling them that it is what I want.

- What is my contribution towards the team's deliveries?

I feel that I have been involved in the discussions regarding our teams possible stakeholders, KPI:s, group contract and setting up technical aid in our future work such as Trello and GitHub repository. In regards to my contribution over the past week I feel that I am where I need to be, so for future work I would like to just keep up the good pace. This I will do by working closely with the team and focus on the task at hand, putting in the time and effort necessary.
